C., wide open, offering a view of a well furnished farmyard. Florence at needlework, R i Nell O Carolan L., writing in a ledger, and his wife Honor, knitting - two girls in the back-ground at needle work. Irish air The Harp that Once, c. Neil. (Closing the ledger.) Faith, and there s but little to cheer my heart when I sum up my profit and loss - rather let me say when I enter my losses - for profit there has been none this many and many a day; plenty would be the roads I can take for myself, but I m distracted intirely, when I think of the wife and childer. (Rises, comes down.) Honor. (Rising also.) Don t fret yourself, Neil, sure now it s because the farm s running out, we must cut short our enjoyment, and endeavour to meet our difficulties by denying ourselves some few comforts; oh, darling, it s a pity you ever took the farm again at such a dreadfully advanced rent. Neil. Is it yourself can tell me how I ought to have it? my father, grandfather, nay great-grand father held this little estate. Honor. (In tears, and leaning on his shoulder.) Och! I know - I understand your feelings, but think for a moment, only for a moment, eight times, eight times the rent. Neil. Sure, it s true every word you say, but I was in hopes that my Lord Squander, the now proprietor of the estate, would visit it the...
